Power and Politics in America
(POL-UA 300; ALHAM-UA 300)
Professor Patrick Egan

What this course is about

This is an introductory course on the national politics of the United States. The course has four parts. First, we discuss the two “ingredients” that give American politics its particular flavor: America’s political institutions and America’s political culture. Second, we turn to elections and political parties, and show how they combine with a unique American phenomenon (strong interest groups) to produce the variant of representative democracy seen in the United States. Third, we turn to the institutions of American national governance: Congress, the President, and the judiciary, exploring the extent of their powers and the constraints faced by actors within these institutions. Finally, we assess the implications of all of this for the most important thing government produces: public policy.

Throughout the course, you will be introduced to the analytical and empirical tools that political scientists use to describe, explain and understand politics and public affairs. In addition, we will devote special attention to placing American politics in a comparative perspective by examining its similarities and differences with the way politics is practiced in other nations throughout the world.

Prerequisites

This course has no prerequisites. Knowledge of basic facts about the American political system is assumed. In addition, knowledge of high school algebra is assumed; we will make frequent use of mathematics.

Course requirements and grading

Five separate components of this course contribute to your grade:

- Two “midterm” examinations (each worth 20 percent of your grade). These are in-class written exams with short answer and short essay questions. The first (held September 26) will cover material presented in Part I. The second (held October 29) will focus on material in Part II.

- A short exercise (15 percent). In this exercise, you will answer an assigned question regarding politics using analytical techniques discussed in class. Data will be provided to you. This assignment must be completed in order for you to pass the course. It will be due November 14.

- A final examination (30 percent). This two-hour written exam will cover material from the entire semester, with a focus on material presented after Midterm #2. According to the Registrar’s office, this exam is currently scheduled to be held on Tuesday, December 17 at 10 a.m.

- Recitation participation (10 percent). Recitations are your chance to better understand the concepts discussed in lecture. In some cases, separate readings will be assigned that you are expected to complete before your recitation meeting. The schedule of recitation readings may be found at the end of this syllabus. Attendance at recitation is mandatory.

  One way that you can improve your participation grade is by submitting stories for In the News, a section of our NYU Classes site on which I will post stories drawn from current events that reflect concepts being discussed in class. Accepted submissions will help to boost your recitation participation grade.

- Pop quizzes (5 percent) will be administered from time to time at the beginning of the lecture period. You must be present to take the quiz and receive credit. Makeups are not permitted.
The fine print

Here are a few policies that I sincerely hope won't be necessary or relevant to our work together this semester:

Missing exams. Students missing an exam will receive a grade of zero. If a true emergency situation arises, contact your teaching assistant before the scheduled test time. If the excuse is justified (such as in cases of illness or family/personal emergencies), we will schedule a make-up. Travel plans (e.g., a plane ticket purchased for departure before the day of the exam) are not an acceptable excuse. The Registrar currently indicates that our final exam will be held in our classroom on Tuesday, December 17 at 10 a.m.

Late assignments. Assignments must be turned in on time by the beginning of class on the day they are due. You will be penalized 1/3 of a grade (e.g. from an A- to a B+) per day late.

Academic dishonesty. The work you do in this course must be your own work. Academic dishonesty is not only against the rules; it is also slothful, cowardly, unfair to your classmates, and a waste of the tuition money you and your family have worked hard to earn. I simply won't tolerate it. The University’s penalties for academic dishonesty are severe. They can include receipt of a failing grade in the course for which plagiarized work was submitted, as well as probation, suspension, or expulsion. Even minor cases can result in the entry of a letter describing the incident in the student’s file kept permanently by the Office of the Dean. For more details, see: http://cas.nyu.edu/page/academicintegrity.

Readings (with syllabus abbreviations)

Books for purchase at the NYU Main Bookstore:

Make sure you read this (6th) edition, which is updated with the latest polling and election results.

Most, but not all, of the readings found in the 5th edition are also in previous editions, which may be available used at a lower price. Note that the chapter and section numbers in the two editions are not always the same.

The second edition of this book is also acceptable for our purposes.

Additional readings will be made available on NYU Classes—they are marked with a (C) on this syllabus—or in a reader (R) that may be purchased at New University Copy, 11 Waverly Place beginning on September 9.
Schedule of Topics and Readings

How to think about the readings: Be sure to read the readings before class on the day they are assigned. The readings for this class average about 70-100 pages per class session. Depending on how fast a reader you are, consider budgeting between two to four hours per class session to keep on top of the readings. In general, it will make sense to read these works in the order specified on this syllabus.
